

Welcome to Dunorlan Park

This map will help you find your way around the park. Use the key on the right to plan your route. Information about the park's main features is included overleaf. You can find out more about the park's history, and events and activities in Dunorlan Park at the information points at the café.

 Dunorlan Park is naturally hilly. However, there is a relatively level path around the lake that can be easily reached from Hall's Hole Road car park. The red paths  are steep and may not be suitable for some visitors. Steps are also highlighted in red.

Help to improve your health by walking the path  around the lake. National guidelines recommend that we all take a total of 30 minutes exercise, five days a week. The walk is nearly one kilometre long and is a very enjoyable way to reach this target.

DUNORLAN PARK

Dunorlan is a special place where everyone can enjoy a richly varied Victorian garden, meadows and wildlife, as well as the amenities of a modern park. Dunorlan was once the private grounds of a large and very grand mansion built by the Yorkshire-born millionaire, Henry Reed, who made his fortune in Tasmania. The garden was laid out in the 1850s and 1860s by the renowned Victorian gardener, Robert Marnock. The mansion no longer exists, but the garden is one of the best preserved examples of Marnock's work.

In 2003/4 the park underwent a major restoration costing £2.8 million, following a Heritage Lottery Fund award of £2.1 million. As part of the project, a wide and interesting range of 15,000 plants and 260 trees were planted.

Dunorlan is remarkable in having a variety of features made of 'Pulhamite', a type of artificial stone manufactured by the firm of James Pulham and Son of Broxbourne. There's a splendid Pulhamite and terracotta fountain, a Grecian temple and cascade.

KEY FEATURES (see map overleaf)

① Chalybeate spring

Tunbridge Wells has long been famous for its health-giving chalybeate springs. Dunorlan's chalybeate spring is known to have been in use since at least 1832, before Robert Marnock designed the garden.

② The terrace

The original Dunorlan House was located above the terrace. Once gravelled, the terrace is now paved with York stone. Victorian visitors enjoyed views to the countryside beyond the grounds of the house. As no clear boundaries could be seen the estate would have seemed more extensive than it actually was.

③ Grecian temple

The interior of the Grecian temple was originally finely painted with an intricate design. Some of the original paintwork can still be seen. The statue, The Dancing Girl, by the Victorian sculptor William Theed, was installed in 1951.

④ Rockery

The large rocks here are a mix of sandstone and Pulhamite and constructed to resemble the sandstone outcrops which occur naturally in this area.

⑤ Avenue

The avenue has been replanted with 48 cedars, carefully picked for their quality and size – three metres high at planting – to recreate the original link between the fountain and temple.

⑥ The fountain

The splendid fountain adorned with dolphins, water nymphs and classical figures is made from Pulhamite and terracotta.

⑦ Water garden

Many of the trees and shrubs Marnock planted in Dunorlan were exciting new introductions to Britain. Some of Marnock's original planting can still be seen in this area, such as the mature pines near the boundary and the rhododendrons near the cascade.

⑧ The cascade

The cascade has changed little since it was built in the 19th century. A number of the large rocks near the cascade were uncovered during the restoration project.
